Why choose Axcent?

Crafted using 100% virgin brass

Imex taps are cast from virgin brass bar, ensuring the highest quality of finished product. This means that the brass is formed from material which is mined fresh and new out of the ground, before being refined, and mixed to create the desired composition of the copper & zinc alloy, free of any impurities.

Only the best components

Our brassware is constructed using components of the highest quality to ensure smooth and long lasting durability. From stylish single lever taps to our WRAS approved, easy maintenance, anti scald shower valves, you can be sure your product will function perfectly for years to come.

Guaranteed peace of mind

All of our brassware comes with a 10 year guarantee for your peace of mind, so you can relax and have full confidence in our product testing & quality.

Styles & colours to suit every bathroom

Our brassware ranges come in a variety of design styles and colour finishes that complement any bathroom suite. Available in Chrome, Brushed brass or Matt black for that stylish final touch.

Our basin and bidet mixers come with a colour matched slotted clicker waste*.

* A slotted waste is only compatible with basins featuring a moulded overflow hole. If these taps are to be used with a countertop bowl, either an unslotted or universal waste will need to be purchased separately.

What pressure rating do I need?

Understanding water pressure and flow rates:

Water pressure is the measurement of the force of water (commonly measured in BAR) and water flow is the measurement of the volume of water in litres-per-minute (LPM). However, the two aren't separate as a good flow rate is often an indicator of good water pressure, as water flow does normally improve when this is higher.

Pipework installation also plays a role in performance – factors like pipe diameter, the number of 90-degree bends, and plastic vs copper pipe, all can impact flow rates.

Imex taps are flow tested against pressures ranging from 0.1 BAR to 5 BAR.

Below details how these pressures relate to commonly installed household water systems in the UK.

Gravity water systems (low pressure system):

This system consists of a hot water cylinder, most likely in an airing cupboard, and a cold storage tank in the loft. The pressure generated relies solely on the distance from the bottom of the cold storage tank to the outlet in question i.e. the tap spout or shower head. For every 1 metre of distance between these points, this generates 0.1 BAR of pressure. With this in mind, the average 2-story house will most likely only generate approximately 0.2 – 0.3 BAR at the bathroom taps.

Pumped gravity or “hybrid” systems:

This system still consists of a hot water cylinder and a cold storage tank but also incorporates a booster pump to increase water pressure around the property. The pressure generated will depend on the rating of the pump fitted but will commonly be between 1 – 3 BAR.

Combination boiler systems (mains pressure):

Combination boiler system have no storage tanks and heat water on demand. These boilers have varying KW ratings which determines how effective it is at heating water and the litres-per-minute (LPM) it can produce. UK mains generally operate somewhere between 2-4 BAR although UK water suppliers are only obligated to provide households with a minimum of 0.7 BAR, measured at the point that water enters the property.

Unvented water system or pressurised cylinders:

A UV water system is fed from the mains water and consist of just a hot water cylinder. These systems can provide a strong flow of hot water throughout your home and generally operate at around 1.5 – 2 BAR.
